Two Systems in Germany

Germany has a dual health insurance system: Most people are covered by statutory health insurance (GKV), some by private health insurance (PKV).

GKV (Gesetzliche Krankenversicherung)

Who is insured here?

- Employees with gross salary up to the insurance threshold (€73,800/year in 2026)
- Students, pensioners, basic income recipients
- Family insurance: Spouses and children are covered for free (if income below €603/month)

Contributions 2026:

- General contribution rate: 14.6% of gross salary
- Additional contribution: avg. 2.9% (varies by fund: 2.18–4.39%)
- Total: approx. 17.5% (employer pays half)
- Contribution ceiling: €66,150/year — above this income, contributions don't increase further

Advantages:

- Family insurance (free for spouse/children)
- Contribution based on income, not health status
- No surcharges for pre-existing conditions
- Uniform service catalog (approx. 95% of services are identical across all funds)

PKV (Private Krankenversicherung)

Who can get private insurance?

- Employees with salary above the insurance threshold (€73,800/year)
- Self-employed and freelancers (regardless of income)
- Civil servants (government allowance + PKV)

Contributions:

- Based on age, health status, and selected plan
- Independent of income
- No employer subsidy for family members (each person pays separately)

Comparison

	GKV	PKV
Contribution	income-dependent	risk/age-dependent
Family insurance	yes (free)	no (each person pays)
Services	standard catalog	depends on plan (often better)
Doctor appointments	standard waiting times	often faster appointments

	GKV	PKV
Return to GKV	—	difficult (nearly impossible after age 55)
In old age	premium decreases with pension	premium can increase significantly

Recommendation for Foreigners

For most immigrants, GKV is the better choice:

- Family insurance saves money
- No risk of rising premiums in old age
- Simpler administration
- Employer pays half

PKV is worthwhile for: high earners without children, self-employed with high income, civil servants
